Community Finds It's Not Immune As Violence Hits Longtime Residents

By Marc Fisher

Washington Post Service BERLIN -- Suddenly, words Turkish-Germans have heard all their lives seem piercing and painful. Even after the neo-Nazi firebombing on Monday that killed 10-year-old Veitr Arrien and two takes Turkish Gaold Yeliz Aralan and two other Turkish-Germans, politicians and press reports spoke of the German-born, German-schooled child only as "a Turk born in Germany." "The anger and shock are deep," said Ek-rem Ozer, a counselor at Housing and Living, a Berlin social agency for foreigners. "Ger-mans small of an onen swinty and onen mans speak of an open society and open borders, but we see now that they do not want to integrate us. We have lost hope that they will accept us as Germans.

"Turks no longer feel fully secure here," said Turkey's ambassador to Germany, Omur Oeymen. "Even after 30 years here, we are subject to great restrictions, and neither the German press nor the people know that foreigners contribute one-tenth of Germany's gross national product."

The fire in the western town of Mölln, the worst assault to date in Germany's recent wave of rightist violence, was the first major attack directed not at the hundreds of thonsands of refugees pouring into Germany from Eastern Europe and elsewhere, but against Turks who have lived most or all of their lives in Germany

Until now, the 1.8 million Turks who live in Germany could hear the numbing daily recitation of oco-Nazi attacks against foreigners as news about others. No more, Turkish-Germans never had illusions about assimilating into Germany society, Turks living in Germany know they remain

"guest workers," not citizens, even after generations in their adopted home, Although they pay taxes, they are not allowed to vote and they face limited quotas for foreigners in German universities even if their entire education has been in Germany. Still, after more than 30 years in the country, many Turks had come to believe that they were at least tolerated. Although Turks remain virtually invisible in Germany's executive ranks and in government, they are no longer seen only in menial jobs. Turks hold professorships and run businesses. The fires in Mölln led Mr. Oeymen to demand "concrete moves by the govern-ment" to halt the spread of neo-Nazi groups and to protect the country's six million fortigners.

that extremists on the right remain a distinct minority. A committee of emergency care physicians announced it would form a "peace corps" to rebuild the houses of the Turkish-Germans in Mölln.

In Bonn, parliament stood in silent memo-rial to the victims of the firebombing, and then issued a statement expressing "shame and rage over this cruci height of the wave of violence

Adam Opel, the German subsidiary of General Motors that employs thousands of Turkish workers, offered a 100,000 Dentsche mark ($67,000) reward for the arrest and conviction of the neo-Nazis responsible for the Mölla bombing.

Despite the flurry of activity, angry and frightened Turks and other foreigners blamed. the government for encouraging anti-foreign-er violence by repeatedly emphasizing the

Nuclear Force Makes Comeback in Russia

Shift of Thinking by Moscow Leaders Could Complicate Clinton's Program

By Fred Hiatt

Washington Post Service MOSCOW — Russian leaders have rejected Mikhail S. Gorbachev's vision of a nuclear-free world and increasingly view nuclear arms as the basis of the nation's future defense, according to senior officials and analysts.

The Russian president, Boris N. Yeltsin, has said that he remained committed to radical reductions of the nuclear force he inherited more radical than anything Mr. Gorbachev, the former Soviet president, had agreed to. But in recent remarks Mr. Yeltsin has em-chasized that Russia will continue to rely on a nuclear deterrent for the foresceable future. In a speech to senior generals here Monday, he said Rossia's prestige as a great power depend-ed in large part on its nuclear force.

"There is a growing trend toward rehabilita-tion of nuclear weapons, and a sense that all these Gorbachevian ideas about ouclear disarmament are outdated," said Andrei Kortunov, an analyst at the quasi-official U.S.A.-Canada Institute

There is a growing perception, especially in military circles, that if Russia wants reliable defenses, and cheap defenses, it needs to keep a nuclear deterrent - and possibly even reconsider its no-first-use strategy

The shift in thinking does not mean that Russia once again views the United States as an enemy. But it could complicate President-elect Bill Clinton's efforts to put into effect a draft agreement for radical nuclear arms cuts signed by Mr. Yeltsin and President George Bush last

And the "rehabilitation" of nuclear arms could rekindle fears in the West about the safety of warheads and fissionable materials in the disorder of the former Soviet Union. Mr. Gorbachev proclaimed as his goal total ouclear disarmament by the year 2000, and he almost persuaded President Ronald Reagan to go along. The collapse of the Soviet Union last year, and the subsequent impoverishment and disarray of its armed forces, further convinced many here and in the West that rapid disarma-ment was the only prudent way to avoid nuclear disaster.

But recently in Russia the pendulum has begun to swing in the opposite direction, with political and military leaders emphasizing the importance of maintaining a credible ouclear force. The shift is echoed also in the increasing respectability of ouclear energy.

A recent lead article in the newspaper Nezavisimaya Gazeta captured the new spirit: "Russia will have to build its defenses around strategic nuclear arms," it said. "That is the most capable part of Russia's armed forces." The renaissance of nuclear arms is one aspect of a general rightward shift of Russia's foreign and military policy. This has been reflected in less compromising positions toward Japan, the BELIING - China appears to have suspended its formal dialogue on human rights with the United States, amid other signs of building tensions in U.S.-Chinese relations just as President-elect Bill Clin-ton is considering whether to adopt a tougher policy toward Beijing. The Chinese decision seems to be in response to the U.S. government's authorization in September to sell F-16 fighter jets to Taiwan. China was ontraged by the sale, which appeared to violate U.S. pledges, and some diplomats expect Beijing to take further retaliatory action. The United States government deci-

Talks on his." Talks on human rights were never espe-cially productive, but they gave U.S. diplo-mats and visiting administration officials a basis for raising inquiries about specific political prisoners.

The discussions also meant that China at least acknowledged that human rights were a valid topic of discussion among officials of the two countries. Now even that much seems to be in jeopardy.

The Bush administration had bailed as an important sign of progress the Chinese decision in December 1990 to open a hu-man rights dialogue. So the suspension appears to be a setback and an embarrassment for the administration. The timing of the Chinese move, which has not been publicly announced, is par-ticularly sensitive because it comes just as Mr. Clinton and his aides are beginning to mold a policy toward Beijing. The oew Chinese approach is still being developed, however, and may permit discussions about human rights with legisla-tors and other Americans who are not part of the administration. In a significant step, China is welcoming five U.S. senators next month for a visit in which human rights concerns are certain to be raised The Foreign Ministry did not directly respond to the questions about whether the buman rights dialogue had been terminated. By avoiding a direct response, such as its frequent comments that reports are "groundless" or "fabricated with ulterior motives," the Foreign Ministry appeared to want to provide a tacit confirmation without painting itself into a corner. In a sign of the sensitivity of the issue, the U.S. Embassy in Beijing took two days to provide the following terse response: "We believe an active dialogue on the issue offers the best chance of furthering both countries' interests. We continue to press China on human rights at every opportu-The embassy declined to comment further, but at a meeting earlier this month, U.S. diplomats are believed to have tried to give the Chinese Foreign Ministry an unofficial written inquiry about political DRISOBERS. The Chinese refused to take it, so the Americans left it on a chair as they left. The Chinese then picked it up and said that there would be no response. But the Americans apparently were heartened that the Chinese at least picked it up. Another strain in the relationship is coming from China's growing trade sur-plus with the United States. The surplus, oow second only to Japan's, amounted to $13.4 billion in the first nine months of this year, more than the total for all of last The leadership in Beijing also has not fully kept a promise made last year to Secretary of State James A. ### Queen's Pronouncement On 40th Year: 'Horrible'

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches LONDON - Queen Elizabeth II - under imprecedented criticism from her loyal subjects, beset by family problems and with her favorite home a fire-blackened rain - said Tuesday that 1992 had been a "horrible year." In an unusually frank personal confession, the queen said she did oot reject all the criticism that had flown around her crowned head this year, but that she wished it could have been a bit gentler and good-humored. To top it all, the queen was suffering from a bad cold, and her voice croaked as she addressed a luncheon given by the Corporation of Londou to mark her 40th year on the throne.

Nineteen ninety-two is not a year on which I shall look back with undiluted pleasure," she said. "In the words of one of my more sympathetic correspondents, it has turned out to be an 'annus horribilis', " a horrible year. "I suspect that I am not alone in thinking it so." Among the low points:

• In March, the queen's second son, An-drew, Duke of York, and his wife, Sarah, Duchess of York, announced they were separating. Tabloid newspapers later splashed pictures of the duchess cavorting topiess with her American "financial adviser."

• In April, Princess Anne, the queen's daughter, divorced Mark Philips.

. In June, Andrew Morton published "Diana: Her True Story," describing the mariage of the queen's eldest son, Charles, and the Princess of Wales as a loveless sham during which the princess had several times attempted to take her life. Newspapers published extracts from a tape purported to be an affectionate chat between the princess and a man who called her "Squidgy." Later, a tabloid said it had heard a similar conversation between Charles and an old flame.

• In September, James Hewitt, a friend of the Princess of Wales, filed a libel suit following speculation in the tabloids about their relationship. The Duchess of York's financial adviser also sued the French magazine Paris Match for breach of privacy. The British tab-loid press referred to Charles and Diana as "the glums" during a recent visit to South

 Last weekend, fire seriously damaged the queen's favorite residence, Windsor Castle, touching off a furor in Parliament and in the press about whether the public should be expected to pick up the estimated £60 million ($90 million) repair bill when homeless people in London are sleeping in cardboard boxes. The fact that the queen, one of the world's wealthiest individuals, receives £7.9 million a year in income from the government without paying taxes on either this or on her undisclosed private income has been the subject of considerable indignation.

The queen came to the throne 40 years ago amid virtually unanimous public support, much of which has evaporated, judging by a poll of 1,077 people for Independent Television News. Only one in five said they thought the royal family gives good value for money. The queen and her ministers, the Daily Mail said, "are out of touch with what people are thinking.

Beyond a swipe at "those whose task it is in life to offer instant opinions on all things great and small." the queen did oot directly mention her tabloid tormentors nor the pack of special-

Europeans Face Deeper Slump In Economies

By Tom Redburn ional Herald Tribune PARIS - Despite the frantic scramble by European political leaders to revive growth, there is little relief in sight to prevent Europe from plunging further into economic retreat, according to independent analysts.

The domestic dimension will come into focus Wednesday, not only because the opposition will use parliamentary debate to attack the government but also because farmers have scheduled demonstrations against the trade agreement in Paris and other cities. The government's objective in the National Assembly appears to be to win overwhelming backing for its contention that the farm trade agreement with the United States goes beyond the subsidy and production cuts agreed upon by the EC when it reformed its own common agricultural policy in May. The Community's executive commission, which worked ont the deal, will probably reject that argnment Wednesday when it meets in Brussels, before the assembly session here. Parliamentary support for new negotiations could nonetheless help France obtain facesaving concessions from the commission.

The two main conservative opnusition narties, however, now seem likely to abstain in the vote of confidence being sought by the government. Instead, in an overt bid to woo the country's farmers, they plan to sponsor a resolution anding that France veto the dem agreement as it now stands

Besides four submarines lost at sea, the Russians have said that several naval nuclear reactors were dumped in shallow waters in the eastern Arctic.

These include four submarine reactor compari-ments, dumped in the Abrosimov Gulf in 20 to 40 meters of water in 1965 and 1966.

Three reactors from the nuclear-powered icebreaker Lenin were dropped into the Sryolki Gulf in A barge with a submarine reactor was sunk in the Kara Sea in 1972. The submarine K-27 was jettisoned after an emergency with two fuel-laden reac-tors in Stepovov Gulf in 1982. In 1988, a reactor was dumped in Techeniya Gulf.

The U.S. Navy has lost two nuclear submarines at sea, the Thresher and the Scorpion, and has damped one reactor, that of the Seawolf in 1959.

The radioactivity in submarine reactors, at least those of American design, has several layers of containment, including the reactor vessel and the fuel elements themselves.

Of possibly greater concern is the radioactive waste dumped at sea. Russian authorities told Dr. Hollister that 11,000 to 17,000 waste containers, holding 61,407 curies of radioactivity, were dumped off Novaya Zemlya from 1964 to 1990. In addition, 165,000 cubic meters (5.8 million cubic feet) of liquid waste were dumped in the Barents Sea west of Novaya Zemlya from 1961 to

The Chernobyl accident released about $6 million auties of radioactivity. Dr. Hollister reckons the amount of nuclear material within some of the Soviet sunken submarines at seven times that in the ill-fated Chemobyl reactor.

The Russian government has made a strong commitment to environmental monitoring and protec-tion, but Dr. Hollister said the problem was formidable. A large amount of nuclear waste is being discharged into the Arctic Ocean from nuclear weap-ons plants along the Ob River in addition to the many deposits on the sea floor. Dr. Hollister noted that escaping radioactive matenals tend to be absorbed by clay on the bottom, but a new concern is the discovery of "storms" on

Offensive Against Travnik

John F. Burns of The New York Times reported earlier from Travnik, Basnia-Herzegovina: Despite a pledge by Serbian commanders to honor a crase-fire across Bosnia, Serbian nationalist forces have mounted an offensive against the old Muslim and Croatian town of Travnik, raising concern that a new phase in the war may be beginning.

For days, Serbian artillery and tanks have attacked Turbe from positions on Mount Vla-sic, 6,400 feet (about 2,120 meters) high, which Gorazde and Srebrenica on Wednesday after commands a deep valley running west from Travnik. The attacks have been accompanied by shelling of Travnik, a town of both strategic In continuing efforts to enforce a UN trade and historic importance to the Muslims and embargo against the runny Yugoslavia, war-croats, who make up more than 80 percent of ships stopped and searched a Montenegrin its population.

Last week, Major General Philippe Morillon of France, the UN commander, said "the beginning of the end" of the conflict might be at hand

But in subsequent days the cease-fire, pro-claimed by General Monillon two weeks ago, appeared to deteriorate. The general, 57 and a veteran of the Foreign Legion, met reporters last week in a dress uni-form for the first time since he assumed command in September, saying he intended the change to mark the shift toward peace.

On Monday, he appeared in combat fatigues, and he spoke caustically of those who have effectively destroyed the cease-fire.

"I blame the radicals on both sides," he said, meaning the Serbian forces and, on the other side, the Bosnian Army and the Croatian De-fense Council. The uncasy Bosnian-Croatian alliance, which fell apart last month, appears to have come together again since the attack on Travnik

UN Fears Montenegro Toxic-Waste Flood

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches GENEVA --- A dam holding back millions of tons of toxic waste in the mountains of Monte-negro could burst at any time and poison Bal-kan rivers including the Dannbe, the United Nations warned on Tuesday. A UN relief official just back from the Yugo-slav republic said it would be "absolutely disas-ture" the dam alconside the internet. trous" if the dam, alongside the river Tara near Mojkovac, collapsed.

The UN Department of Humanitarian Affairs was urgently flying in repair materials to avert the dam's collapse, but it could already be too late, said the official, Hans Zimmermann, relief coordinator for the department.

Speaking of the likelihood of a collapse soon, he said. 'I hope it's weeks, but with bad luck it could be days and with very bad luck it's already collansed."

"It would certainly poison anything in the Tara and probably poison anything in the Dan-ube as well," Mr. Zimmermann added. Everyone who drinks water from the Danube system from Montenegro through Belgrade to the Black Sea would be in danger, he said. The dam, about 600 meters (1,950 feet) long and 12 meters high, was built about 20 years ago to contain a massive reservoir of waste from local lead and zinc mines. It does not feature on any national registers of toxic waste, even though it contains about 20 hectares (50 acres) of waste up to 12 meters deep.

The reservoir appears not yet to have pollut-ed the Tara, described by the Montenegrins as the "cleanest river in Europe" and protected by Unesco as a natural monument.

But flash floods in the Tara in the first week of October and again on Oct. 17-18 ate away at the dam's concrete foundations over a length of about 150 meters, Mr. Zimmermann said. If the dam collapsed, 7 million tons of toxic waste behind it would slide slowly westward down the Tara and northward through the Drina River into the Sava and Danube."

Mr. Zimmermann said that UN disaster re-lief specialists did not hear about the possible dangers until Oct. 23, when they were tipped off by a Security Council sanctions committee.

The panel, monitoring a trade embargo against Montenegro and neighboring Serbia, had received a letter from Montenegrin authorities asking permission to import materials to repair a number of constructions, including the dam.

It will take the UN team up to a week to make three temporary jetties upstream to stop the full force of the river from further croding the 150-meter center section of the base of the dam. Then they will start to build a small second dam immediately in front of the current structure to protect it in case of further high water.

A permanent solution is yet to be deter-mined. Building a safe permanent dam would cost about 1 million Deotsche marks ($625,000), and that still does not address what to do with the poisons, be said.

Russia May Sell 20 MiG-29s to India

NEW DELHI (AFP) — Russia has agreed to sell 20 MiG-29s to India to help it install a fourth squadron of fighters on the country's northern border with Pakistan, a newspaper reported Tuesday. The Indian Express said New Delhi clinched the $466-million deal with Russia during Defense Minister Sharad Pawar's visits to Moscow in September and earlier this month for talks on joint production of MiG jets in India.

India has three squadrons (60 planes) of MiG-29s, which it purchased on a ruble-rupee trade from the former Soviet Union before its disinte-gration. It also has a fleet of several older models of MiGs as well as other Soviet-built military planes such as Sukhoi bombers, Antonov and Tupulov transporters and helicopters.

Key Indicator: Clinton Chief-of-Staff Choice

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas - Of all the personnel decisions President-elect Bill Clinton faces, none may determine the success of his administration more than his choice of a White House chief of staff.

Although Mr. Clinton has not yet indicated his choice for the job, Although Mr. Clinton has not yet indicated his choice for the joo, many see clues emerging in the way he appears to be defining the position — a definition that sharply departs from the pattern prevailing under his two Republican predecessors. While Ronald Reagan and George Bush allowed strong chiefs of staff enormous freedom to operate almost as deputy presidents, Mr. Clinton — a far more assertive manager — appears to be looking instead for an "honest broker" who knits together a wide range of advisers, many around him say. around him say. In recent articles, Jack Valenti and Arthur M. Schlezinger Jr., both of whom worked in the White House for Democratic presidents of whom worked in the white House for Democratic presidents during the 1960s, each arged Mr. Clinton to do away with the chief-of-staff position, arguing it has tended in recent times to isolate presidents. In its place, they maintained, he should rely on a system where a broad range of aides have virtually investicied access — the so-called spokes of the wheel model employed by Frankin Roose-velt, and to some extent by Jimmy Carter at the outset of his administration administration.

But most experts counseling Mr. Clinton believe such a system condemns a president to submersion in minutiae. "You can't operate like that because you run the risk of being nibbled to death by a lot of secondary and tertiary issues," says Elaine Kamarck, a senior fellow at the Progressive Policy Institute, a Washington-based research organization with close ties to Mr. Clinton.

In any case, the Arkansas governor's record suggests that he is unlikely to allow his chief of staff to become the sole bridge between the Oval Office and the outside world, as Mr. Reagan and Mr. Bush generally did.

In Arkansas, Mr. Clinton redefined the chief-of-staff job for his gubernatorial administration depending on the qualities of the person sitting in the chair. Betsey Wright, for instance, who served as his chief of staff from 1983 to 1990, had more freedom to make decisions than either of the men who preceded or followed her in the

But one constant was that Mr. Clinton did not want his staff chief to function as a "gatcheeper" who would systematically narrow his contacts. Mr. Clinton preferred to deal directly with legislators. And he regularly convened meetings not only with department heads but also lower-level staff members to discuss ideas and sketch his legislative agenda.

"I used to feel my role was maximizing access," Ms. Wright said. "It was the opposite of being a gatekeeper."

Other than taxpayer-sponsored Camp David, presidents have traditionally had private domiciles outside of Washington, Jimmy Carter had Plains, Ronald Reagan had the ranch. George Bush has Kennebunkport — and a Houston lot, While senior staff members say that while the Clintons are expected to buy a place soon, no decisions have been made. # U.S. Hands Over Base at Subic Bay 94 Years in Philippines, Military Lowers Last Flag

By William Branigin

Washington Post Service MANILA - The United States on Tuesday formally handed over to the Philippines its last military base in Southeast Asia, lowering the American flag over an airfield attached to Subic Bay Naval Station. The ceremony ended 94 years of American military presence in the Philippines.

President Fidel V. Ramos, after witnessing the raising of a Philippine As about 800 Marines and sailors boarded the amphibious assault ship, Belleau Wood, and prepared to sail out of Subic Bay, they left behind up to $3 billion worth of facilities on one of the largest U.S. military installations overseas as well as a wild liberty town that now military installations overseas, as well as a wild liberty town that now faces the uncertainties of trying to transform itself into a commercial port and industrial center

But they also were forsaking thousands of children fathered with Philippine women, many of them bargirls in Olongapo, a city of about 300,000 adjacent to Subic Bay about 50 miles (80 kilometers) northwest of Manila

And they departed amid controversies over toxic wastes that critics said remained on the base and over plans for future access to Philippine ports and airfields.

Mr. Ramos said that the Philippine government would do everything it could to help the "throw-away children" of U.S. servicemen. "I will not allow them to end up in poverty, much less in street gangs," he said. But he added, "The welfare of these young Filipino-Americans remains the joint responsibility of both countries, which does not terminate with the withdrawal of U.S. forces from the Philippines." Mr. Ramos also called for "a new framework" to promote greater U.S.-Philippine economic cooperation and the development of the base for commercial purposes.

"Subic Bay is now open for business for the whole world," declared Mayor Richard Gordon of Olongapo.

A Marine sergeant carrying the Stars and Stripes on Tnesday after it was lowered for the last time at Subic Bay Naval Station.

The U.S. government insists that, despite relinquishing its last base in Southeast Asia, the United States will remain a Pacific power and continue to project its forces across the region. But there is a wide-spread perception that the departure from Subic Bay reflects a growing U.S. military disengagement that could unsettle confidence in the stability of the economically booming area and lead other countries. notably China and Japan, to take more active roles.

The U.S. Navy's pullout from the Philippines occurred as a result of the Philippine Senate's rejection last year of a treaty that would have extended the American presence in the country for at least another decade in return for more than $2 billion in aid payments. The U.S. Air Force last year withdrew from Clark Air Base, 50 miles north of the capital, after the eruption of the nearby Mount Pinatubo volcano buried the region in ash. Manila gave the navy until the end of this year to withdraw, which it has been doing progressively.

Except for three years during World War II, the U.S. military had maintained a presence here since 1898, when it seized the Philippines from Spain. U.S. troops then put down a nationalist revolt and helped turn the archipelago into America's only colony. Washington granted independence in 1946 but prevailed on Manila to accept U.S. bases.

Refusing to Fly Host Flag, French Navy Miffs Vietnam

HAIPHONG, Vietnam - The first visit of a French warship to a northern Vietnamese port since the end of French colonial rule in-1954 was marred Tuesday when the frigate refused a demand to fly: the Vietnamese flag.

The French military attaché, Lieotenant-Colooel Daniel Schaeffer, said the disagreement was "only a technical question." hut Vietnamese officials at this port 100 kilometers (60 miles) east of Hanoi were angered.

"It means they don't recognize Vietnamese sovereignty," said a senior customs officer.

He said it was standard practice for all foreign ships entering Vietnam's ports to fly the red flag with yellow star. But international naval protocol would not seem to require that foreign vessels raise. Vietnam's flag upon entering its ports. The surveillance frigate Nivose arrived in Haiphong on Tuesday

French diplomats denied that the first recent visit of a Western warship to Vietnam had any link to the tensions between Vietnam and China.

Vietnamese naval and civilian officials staged an elaborate wel-_ coming ceremony for the Nivose, but crew members were asked to a stay on board while Ambassador Claude Blanchemaison of France and Colonel Schaeffer went to see city officials to negotiate a solution on the flag diagreement.

By Sally Squires Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — A federal panel has unanimously recommended a clinical trial of a controversial AIDS vaccine, despite what the group said was lack of tradirional scientific instification for the program.

"The panel discussed in great detail other, nontraditional scientific criteria," said Anthony Fauci, di-rector of the Office of AIDS Research at the National Institutes of Health and chairman of the panel that made the recommendation.

Based on that review, Mr. Fauci said, the panel decided Monday that there were enough data to rec ommend a large-scale clinical trial of the vaccine, known as gp160, but added two conditions.

Chinese Boeing Crashes, Killing 141

BELJING - A Chinese Boeing 737 crashed Tuesday into a mountainside outside the tourist resort of Guilin, in southern China. All 141 people on board were killed, rescue workers said. It was the worst acci-dent ever reported in Chinese civil aviation history.

The China Southern Airlines jet was on a half-hour domestic flight from Guangzhou to Guilin and crashed about 7:30 A.M. during its approach to the mountain-ringed airport, airline officials said.

The airliner carried 133 passengers and 8 crew members, Chinese aviation officials said. There was confusion over passenger identities because the flight was unscheduled, having been added to accommodate passengers during the peak travel season, a Western diplomat said by telephone from Guangz-hou. The airline was forced to recreate the passenger manifest from sales records, which showed 13 passengers had paid for seats with for-eign exchange certificates.

The crash was China's fifth known aviation disaster in less than four months. The others, which left a total of 169 people dead, involved two Soviet-built passenger jets and two Soviet-built helicopters.

Americans can be deeply pleased by Hanoi's new cooperation in the nearly 20-year search for information bearing on the 2,265 Americans still listed as unaccounted for. But it is sobering to consider that presumably Hanoi has possessed these supposedly overriding need. It withheld articles and documents for years and that it when it was in its evident interest to divulge could have turned them over at any time during the long stretch when it was saying it had nothing further to impart.

These disclosures create their own em-barrassments. Not to be ungracious, but the fact is that everyone now knows that a certain number of the American MIA families were strung along and deprived of what comfort the earlier provision of information might have brought. Everyone also knows that the disclosures by which the Victnamese government now moves to repair its international position call into question its good faith in the past. This is a difficult but necessary hurdle to overcome

Vietnam's readiness to cooperate on

MIAs has been explained as a response to an urgent national need to break the economic embargo imposed by the United States. But that need has been ungent for years. Every day that Hanoi delayed in resolving the MIA impasse cut across this and when it knew that there would be a cost to tardy divulgence. Its record does not make it easy for American supporters of normalization, a generation in the coming, to be hung up indefinitely on a suspicion - inevitably an ineradicable suspicion that Hanoi is still holding back. At a cer-tain point a national judgment has to be made to move on. The forthcoming report of the Senate MIA committee should contribute to this judgment.

Canada's Military Lesson

In the last frenzied week of the U.S. presidential election, neighbors to the north were coming to grips with a major policy decision of their own. "Canadians, regardless of their sexual orientation, will now be able to serve their country in the Canadian Forces without restriction," announced General John de Chastelain, chief of Canada's defense staff. In the month since, the Canadian armed forces have shown no signs of coming apart at the scame. Nor has welcome mat to homoscruals, his no-nonsea up in arms

As with several NATO countries that now do not view the presence of homosexuals as a military or legal issue, Canada did not find gays and lesbians fit for military service overnight. It took a secies of court cases and the constant pressure of civil liberties groups to bring the military's policies in line with the country's constitution. But what is note-worthy about General de Chastelain's decision is that while he did not lay out a sense announcement headed off free-lancing by senior officers and set the tone to be followed by men and women in the ranks. Canada's new realism will be reflected in military programs, particularly in anti-sec-ual-harassment training and in policies against unfair treatment based on gender or sexual orientation. Instead of filling the Canadian airwaves with threats of resignations or launching hate campaigns against gays and lesbians in the ranks, senior commanders are reported to be discussing new programs that will build on the cohesiveness, discipline and good order that already exist in their service. Canada's military leadership wants this to work.

High Time for an International Drive Against Nazism

N EW YORK - in my files is a collection of letters and articles denouncing the idea that Nazis could ever again be a threat in Germany or Europe. They began arriving a couple of years ago, after I had written col-umns saying that Germany and the West had rushed into German unification as if memories of Nazis, Auschwitz, Rotterdam, slave labor, Holocaust were not an indelible part of human history, as if the danger of the past becoming the future was not even worth mentioning before the papers were signed. Some letters came from young Germans mhappy that I could think that they or their country now had any connection with those times and crimes. I went to visit them in Germany. We did our best to explain ourselves to each other. But I do not think we succeeded.

The first step should be a Western summit meeting to give Nazism the spotlight and attention it so richly merits.

By A. M. Rosenthal

Then, when citizens of the "unified" Germany started killing and beating up foreigners, I wrote of fears that it would spread. More letters came, more columns and articles of denunciation or derision. A number of attacks were from Americans.

One was a front-page editorial in a New York German-language newspaper, reminding me of the fate of Jews who had dared anger Germans. To the editor who wrote it: I remember.

Western statesmen said little about what was going on in the new Germany, the pivot around which the new Europe was being built — said little and did nothing.

I mention all this because I believe that two important years have been wasted. If the world had cared enough to pay attention to the rise of Nazism in the 20s and 30s, if the world had stirred itself to any action at all, how many humans, cities and countries would have escared the fire?

Now there are no years to spare. Over the weekend, Nazis demonstrated around the country and in Hamburg killed three foreign-ers. Kill is what Nazis do. In the past two years thousands of Nazis have committed thousands of crimes.

The majority of Germans may be anti-Nazi. or "non-Nazi" - a phrase hard to grasp. But the "demonstrators" are not just a fringe gang of East Germans upset by foreign workers and refugees. Nazis operate in West Germany as well as East. It is time to stop calling them neo-Nazis or night-wing extremists. They and we know who they are. So do those Germans who cheer them on — they know. And the attacks on foreigners, particularly those of dark skin, are not just sudden bursts of violence. They are as much a part of Nazi strategy as were the first attacks on the Jews. Nazism in Germany, the beart of the Couti-nent, spawns Nazis in Central and Eastern Europe. It was so in the '30s and '40s and is so now in Hinngary, Romania, Russia, the Bal-kans. Germany faces an emergency situation. That is the conclusion of the Heisinki Watch on human rights. Germany's crisis is our crisis. Surely we have learned that much from Hitler. But the West takes no action. It is all left to a German government that has failed utterly to contain the threat. The West cannot take over the responsi-bility of the German government to use full political and police power against the Nazis. But at least the West can pinch the German government into effective action, thus bolstering the anti-Nazis of Germany and Cen-

The shame could deepen. Europe-ans who are following the crisis realize that it could soon spill beyond the borders of what was Yugoslavia if Mr. Milosevic extends "ethnic cleansing" to Kosovo, the Albanian enclave inside Serbia, where ethnic fighting could provoke a Balkan war. Manfred Wömer, the German who is secretary-general of NATO, said in an interview here last week that the United Nations Security Council might authorize Europeans to send troops into Kosovo to try to prevent the civil war from spreading there, and that European or NATO governments might conceivably agree to send peacekeeping forces. But senior members of NATO governments acoff at this suggestion as wishful thinking. conceil would approve such a move or that Europeans would support it. "Europe has made a decision

America to take the lead," a British commentator said at a recent confer-ence of trans-Atlantic politicians and not to have its people killed there." The Serbian cuisis seems to be the realization of West Europe's worst nightmares about what might happen in the wake of the collapse of commuspecialists. Many other Europeans at specialists. Many other Europeans at the table nodded agreement. "There is no way that Europe, act-ing alone, will intervene in Yugosla-via or anywhere else," said a serior Frenchman. "Europe lacks the will." This failure accurately reflects the total absence of any consensus about total absence of any consensus about the proper role for the West European democracies in the new Europe. There is no agreed strategy. "What we have done up to now is just window dress-ing," said one German, speaking of Western Europe's efforts so far to intestates into its sphere of prospenty. Instead, the West Europeans seem still to be looking to the United States for guidance. A visitor from Washington who suggests that the younger generation now inheriting power in America may expect Europe to be more resourceful in solving its own

The regional powers, in surrendering some modicum of domination of local af-fairs, would shed political and economic habilities and gain regional au-thority and international assistance. To create such a network of interlocking jurisdictions and regional as-sociations would be no mean task, but clearly the alternatives are even more cosity. The lesson of Yugoslavia is that existing regional and inter-national organizations should be strengthened and their decision making made less cumbersome. Prompt and unequivocal response is crucial in dealing with local conflicts. The indispensable condition for any successful policy in the former Soviet Union lies in energetic efforts to achieve arms reduction Of course, Washington must press ahead with agreements - and compliance with agreements -- on anclear arms and be watchful about proliferation. But far more disruptive is the almost uncontrolled trade in small and medium arms — from Kalashnikovs to tanks -- now accumulating in the hands of any number of political organizations (and bands of ordinary mercenaries) that threaten to draw widening circles of third parties into the quagmire of local conflict. It is crucial to world order that the United States and its closest partners assist populations in the former Soviet. assist populations in the former Soviet Union to survive the consequences of the collapse of the Minscovite empire. That deci-sion by General Colin Powell's opposite number in Canada was not, however, a spontaneous act. It followed promptly on the inects of a court ruling that the military's restrictions on gays and lesbians violated the country's Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The case involved a woman who joined the military in 1986, finished tops in her basic training class and was forced out in 1989 after admitting that she was a lesbian. It was her suit, settled just before it was scheduled for a hearing, that led to the court's decision.

Bonn Has Moved Too Slowly

Officials in Bonn have now been forced to acknowledge that the attacks on foreigners that have been taking place in much of Eastern Germany are the result of an organized terror campaign by neo-Nazis, rather than spontaneous acts by rootless and politically ignorant young thugs. It took three more deaths Monday to prompt this belated reconsideration. Those deaths, resulting from firebomb attacks on two apartment buildings in the town of Mölin, brought to at least 14 the number of foreigners murdered in Germany this year. The most recent victims were Turks, two of them women, the third a 10-year-old girl. Turkey's embassy in Bonn has decried the latest killings as crimes against humanity. The wave of xenophobic violence that has occurred in the last two years, along with chilling signs of a revived anti-Semi-tism, is usually attributed to the social disarray and economic hardships growing out of unification. This may plausibly explain the pathological behavior of some. It in no way excuses the political behavior of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government.

Bonn has been delinquent in recognizing the level of threat facing foreigners in Germany, and lax in accepting the need to bring the power of the federal government to bear in a growing national crisis. Germany is now preparing to enact a new immi-gration law, but that won't protect foreigners already in the country from hateinspired attacks. Providing such security is a moral as well as a legal responsibility. Bonn has been much too slow to act.

Tokyo's Influence in Tehran

Arab countries on the Gulf and also the United States are increasingly concerned over Iran's military buildup. These coun-tries were particularly disturbed by Iran's purchase of submarines from Russia and other such actions.

Japan's relations with Iran have generally been developing well. Tokyo should try to convince Tehran to act prudently and to work toward a better relationship with Washington. Japan's efforts to guide Iran into cooperation with Western nations benefit the world community. The government reportedly is ready to give the go-ahead on resuming yen credits to Iran, after years of suspension, to improve the irving standards of the Iranian people. This certainly will help reality-oriented political forces in Iran.

But Japan must proceed cautiously. It should make sure the United States fully understands Japan's motives and objectives to avoid unnecessary friction.

WASHINGTON - In this sea-son of thanks, there are two things especially that America can be grateful to its voters for doing.

First, they struck a blow against gridlock in Washington and for re-sponsible government by giving one party control of the legislative and executive branches for the first time in 12 years. Divided government and the finger-pointing blame game it encourages frustrate everyone inside and outside the Beltway. Ending it and outsur the betway. Ending it does not guarantee action, but at least it places the responsibility for what happens so clearly that those in power cannot duck and dodge.

The second thing to be grateful for is that when the voters decided to entrust the national government to the Democrats, they put them on clear notice that they are on probation. If they don't deliver, their charter will be withdrawn. Obviously, Bill Clinton, with his shaky 43 percent plurality victory, has to know that he is on trial. Bu

In the last Congress, the Demo-cratic majorities, assured in advance that George Bush would veto their vote or less, 99 with 55 percent or less, and 160 with 60 percent or less. As they look ahead to 1994, they know that Congress must deliver, handiwork, passed a campaign fi-nance reform bill that would have or else they may be gone. Congress faces an even greater challenge, because fewer than 20 percent of the voters, in poll after poll this year, gave a thumbs-up to the tab on Capitol rills and at strengthening the party leadership to focus responsibility for moving the legislative agenda forward. In January the Henitage Founda-tion will publish a major study of Congress, challenging the lawmak-ers' penchant for micro-management of the executive branch in the interests of their own re-election campaigns. > who traditionally ran the province. tion. One representative would be elected for every 52,000 votes. Tolerance of diversity is growing mong many South Africans. This is broadening the base for all political parties. As an example, Dave Dailing, one of five former Democratic Party mem-bers of Parliament, joined the ANC this year and has already been elected to its powerful Pretoria Witswatersrand Vaal egional executive committee.

By Robert H. Phinny

The South African Communist Party is the one liberation organization that dif-fers with the vision held by the majority. It seeks policies of nationalization and a centrally controlled economy within a one-party system. It must oot be allowed to throttle the present opportunity.

Joe Slovo, chairman of the Communist Party and a high-ranking member of the ANC's executive and policy-making committee, now sits at the negotiating table level with Nelson Mandela and President de Klerk.

A united drive by all leaders, with the exception of the Communists, could bring South Africa into that part of the international community that stands for human dignity and a free-market sys-tem. International acceptance of South Africa could reverse the downward spiral of the country's economy.

This would improve employment prospects for the more than 40 percent of blacks now without jobs: And it could end the feeling of hopelessness that leads to confro ously hostile toward international in-volvement, now bustles with invited eace monitors, from the United Nations, the Commonwealth, the European Community and the Organization of African Unity - not to mention South Africa's own overworked National Peace Accord secretariat.

Commissions, thick with lawyers, plod vainly around the country trying to get to the bottom of the most appalling incidents of violence. Arrests are too few; killings go on. Clearly, the most dangerous area is the subtropical province of Natal on the eastern seaboard, where an obdirate Chief Mangosuthu Bathelezi gnides his Zulu-based Inkatha Freedom Party. The Zulu people are divided between those who support the African National Congress of Nelso Mandela and those who support Chief Buthelezi, who is poliocally closer to Pretoria — indeed, not uncomfortable stand to the right of Mr. de Klerk. The Buthelezi dispute with the ANC is a struggle over who emerges with what huence in the new South Africa. Opinion polls give Chief Buthelezi low public support. But he remains a formidable factor in South African politics. Unless the ANC-Inkatha quarrel can be patched up, it will cost many more lives. Natal at times raises the prospect of a Biafra, reminiscent of the separatist

Zulu "homeland" is not one piece of territory, which complicates a separatist strategy. But Chief Buthelezi could, in desperation, issue a call to arms throughout Natal - which would see his Zulu followers in bizarre coalition with conservative English-speaking whites

The warfike defiance of Jonas Sa-vimbi, the election loser in Angola, could be repeated in Natal after South African elections. The ANC has been making conciliatory noises before talks.

Intervening in Somalia The international relief efforts run by the United Nations and other donor agencies have yet to make a definitive mpact in Somalia. It is time for UN military intervention to overwhelm and disarm the fighting forces, end the violence and restore peace and stability. An interim UN administration will be required, until such a time as elections can be held to choose a government of unity d reconciliation.

The precedent of UN intervention in Cambodia is a good one. So is that of UN intervention in Korea in the 1950s. The level of human suffering in Somaha is horrible; the world cannot, in good conscience, stand back and watch it deteriorate further. Especially for the sake of the defenseless children tragically caught in the crossfire, the United Nations should intervene and, through effective enforcement action, arrest the process of disintegration that is under way.

I gained this new insight into my previous self after visiting Sage Agasthiyar's thatched-roofed branch office in Tiruchchirappalli in southern India and giving his latter-day disci-ples $25. Whereupon, after I spent 90 minutes answering perhaps 200 detailed questions about my personal and professional life, a disciple discov-ered a palm leaf inscribed in an ancient hand that no one but the sage's disciples can read. He translated the writing, and it revealed all sorts of details about my personal and professional life that the sage had foretold more than 30 centuries before. It is hard not to become curious

Regarding "Fear of Everything" (Back Page, Oct. 16) by Russell Baker:

Mr. Baker's sassy column is mistitled — the real juice is in his choice phrase, "terminal timidity." Timidity, that is, of death, a word still as taboo as sex used to be. In this cosmetic age we are totally identified with our bodies - and our bodies are going to die, so it is scary. Socrates scoffed at our fears: "No one knows but that death is the greatest of all good to man, yet men fear it." "Nothing can happen more beautiful than death," sang Walt Whitman.

In 1811 Thomas Jefferson declared he was ready to pack it in any day. He must nave been the first poliocian to speak out for vuluntary cuthanasia: "There is a It is unclear to what extent police fullness of time," he wrote to a friend, "when men should go, and not occupy these life-threatening commands to jus-tify subsequent slaughter. A standard-ized set is clearly desirable. Consider-ation should also be given to the civil wars and so forth and let's focus on the rights of the deaf and, in the cases of the real issue of the day: a planet strangling

"I" am - bave a continuing existence separate from my body. Just sit, close your eyes and look back. I see myself, a 21/2-year-old frozen with shame, having soiled my new frilly pants; a sweating 11-year-old riding out s sudden sou-wester in an Indian dugout canoe; a huge shapeless body at 27 breathing deep in oatural childbirth. And I ...NOW that the "I" who remembers these changing bodies is itself unchang-ing — the same "I" who sees the 70-wear-old one "Transfing at these ticlou year-old oow swearing at these sticky computer keys.

So, down with terminal timidity, folks, and up with the right to die, by our own choice, in our own time, ROSEMARY HAMILTON.

FRANKFURT - Ignatz Bubis says he understands why, after the unspeakable horrors of the past, few Jews have chosen to live in Germany, as he does. But after the increasingly unspeakable horrors of the present, even he is beginning to wonder whether Germans have truly overcome their terrible legacy.

Mr. Bubis was 18 when he arrived as a survivor of the Nazi labor camps in Poland, where his parents had fatally sought refuge from the Nazis. Now, at 65, he is chairman of the Central Council of Jews in Germany, chief spokesman for the country's 40,000 Jews and increasingly a voice of the German national conscience, hoping desperately that he is not just crying in the wilderness.

"t am one who has always exhorted Germans not to suppress the past," he said in the prosperous office building and residence where he tries to run his real estate development business and lives with his wife. Ida.

"After what has been happening lately, I am beginning to think that I have repressed some of the past as well," he said, "not that one can compare the violence of today with what happened between 1933 and 1945; that would be an insult to the victims."

But attacks by neo-Nazi mobs on forcign asylumseekers and Victnamese laborers in Rostock last summer, and an arson attack near Hamburg that burned to death a 5t-year-old Turkish mother, her t0-year-old daughter and a t4-year-old niece have shaken him.

"My daughter is 29, and she is less optimistic than t am," he said. "She is asking berself whether she chau newspaper. "Politics has much to do with symbols, with gestures and acts that extend beyond intention of going anywhere," he said.

He was not afraid as a Jew living in Germany in 1992, he insisted, though almost every day some new atrocity gave him further reason to deplore the paralysis of nearly the entire German political class, and its failure to stop the violence.

"My belief in democracy in Germany, in democratic Germany, is still very strong," he said. "But there are these terrible events, and until now they have not been taken seriously enough. We need not only to punish the criminals who are responsible, we need to deter them."

In the few weeks since he became the country's chief Jewish spokesman, after the death of Hemz Galinski, Mr. Bubis has made a remarkable impression on the national consciousness. After every atrocity against foreigners, Mr. Bubis has appeared on the scene with the right words, urging politicians and the public to take the right actions. So far, he fears, with little effect.

When 300 leftist rioters pelted President Richard von Weizsäcker with eggs and paint while he was trying to speak to a crowd of 350,000 peaceful demonstrators against violence in Berlin on Nov. 8, Mr. Bubis rushed to the podium to help shield him, and took the microphone to express the sense of national shame felt by thousands of the silent majority in the crowd.

"This is the way people would like to see our political leaders speak and behave," the Berlin news-paper Der Tagesspiegel observed last Sunday. "If only Bubis were one of them."

signs are not clear enough. Every person must take public, visible action against the criminals."

"My mother died in our apartment in 1940; my father died, or rather was murdered, in the Treblinka concentration camp," Mr. Bubis remembers. "My sister and brother fled into Soviet-occupied Poland in 1939 and that was the last I ever heard of them." The Nazis took him into labor camps, in Deblin, then Czestochowa, where he was liberated in 1945 when the Red Army marched in.

"I didn't want to stay in Poland after the war, because of the anti-Seminism there," Mr. Bubis said. I went back to Breslan but I didn't feel at home: I had left as a small child, and now I came back more or less as an adult, but I didn't know anybody. So I went on to Dresden and Berlin, checked into the Schlachtensee displaced persons camp and would have gone on to America or perhaps Palestine."

But Schlachtensee was one camp too many. Mr. Bubis checked out and moved to West Berlin, made friends, and has remained in Germany, becoming a jewelry and precious metals dealer near Stuttgart, then coming to Frankfurt to manage real estate investments. He and his wife, a distant relative whom he had met in Poland, became German citizens, and got rich.

A wealthy Jewish landlord who made millions by speculating in apartment houses and hotels and becoming head of Frankfurt's Jewish community might seem to be a German anti-Semite's dream, but Mr. Bubis has effectively countered anti-Semitism wherever be has run up against it,

In 1985, when one of the city's largest theaters sought to produce a play by the late Rainer Werner Fassbinder that many considered anti-Semitic, there was speculation that Mr. Bubis had even been the model for the "rich Jew" in the play, "Trash, the City, and Death." He and other members of the Frankfurt Jewish community occupied the stage and prevented the opening.

In Rostock at the beginning of this month, Mr. Bubis brought up short one of the city's legislators for asking him, as a Jew, whether Israel was really his home. The remark, Mr. Bubis said, showed how many Germans even today cannot accept Jews as citizens of their country like everybody else. The city apologized and the legislator resigned under pres-

After the deaths of the Turkish woman and girls Monday, Mr. Bubis vigorously rejected a call by the writer Ralph Giordano for Jews to ann themselves for self-defense.

"That is nonsense," Mr. Buhis said. "We are not building a private army; we look to the state to defend all its citizens, first of all by taking strong and effective punitive action against those who resort to violence

But he is robustly critical both of German justice and of German leaders. The political system, and Chancellor Helmut Kohl, had not acted either soon enough or decisively enough after the violence against foreigners began two years ago, Mr. Bubis

"When our political leaders finally take things in hand, I'll stop my activities," he said. "I'm still waiting.

Heads It's Not the Queen On New Hong Kong Coins

HONG KONG -- Hong Kong is dropping the queen's portrait from its currency as it prepares to switch from British to Chinese rule

Joseph Yam, chief executive-designate of Hong Kong's monetary authority, unveiled new designs for smaller denomination coms Tuesday. They will be introduced early next year, and the bills will follow follow later.

The new currency will feature a Chinese banhinia flower and "Hong Kong" in English and Chinese. Hong Kong coms now have the queen's portrait and the words "Queen Elizabeth the Second" in English on one side and the currency's value and the words "Hong Kong" in Chinese and English on the reverse side.

"As the existing coins and bank notes bear references which will become inappropriate to the status of Hong Kong as a special administrative region of the People's Republic of China, they need to be progressively replaced and withdrawn from circulation," Mr. ud. He said the changes were outlined in the 1984 Chinese-British Joint Declaration.

Talip Ozkan, the Virtuoso of the Turkish Saz

ARIS — Coming in from an evil an-turn evening rain, the Turkish restau-rant in the wilds of the 11th arrondissement was steaming. A beautiful sad woman with bags under her eyes sat in the middle of the boisterous crowd. The strolling sac virtuoso played and sang his sensuous songs for her, flirting like musicians do. Avoiding eye contact, she looked down and held back a smile, as though wishing she could be touched.

A few weeks later, Talip Ozkan was sitting cross-legged in his small sixth-floor walk-up around the corner. Shoes are left at the door, you sit on the floor. I asked him about the sad woman. He did not remember her but said that he flirted like that all the time, usually with more success. Anyway, he doesn't play there anymore.

"In my country, virtuosos do not work under such conditions," he explained in melodic Ori-entally accented French. "It is not considered correct to play in restaurants. The spirit of Paris accepts such things like people talking and not listening. The owners kept begging me, 1 want-ed to help them out and to take my music out of my house. But it made me very tired."

The notes accompanying his new album, "The Dark Fire" (Axiom), begin: "The music of the traditional Turkish say has been called of the traditional Turkish saz has been called the world's most intensely physical, volup-tuously rich and rhythmically hypnotic, full of mystical and poetic overtones." Considered by musicologists to be the world's foremost living saz player, Ozkan perused my copy of his CD. He had not known it was released. The record company, with offices in New York, had not yet sent one to the wilds of the 11th.

If Ozkan spoke English and not French he might be in New York. As it is, he came to Paris from Ankara in 1977 (he is now in his early 50s) because no Turkish university offered a doctorate in ethno-musicology, which he earned at the Sorbonne.

At the age of seven, he started to play saz in the Anatolian village in which he was born. He began to be "recognized as an artist" after winning a contest conducted by Radio Ankara winning a contest conducted by Radio Ankara in his early 20a. Working for Radio Ankara, Izmir and Istanbul, he was on the air with traditional saz music just about daily. He be-came an "inspector," making sure folklore was being cared for properly. He went to remote corners to catalogue. But at the time, life was hard for musicians interested in studying "pure" traditional model systems and time sig-

Saz player Ozkan: "Music is basically the same everywhere."

"Saz" means "the instrument." It has a long thin neck and a bulbous resonating chamber something like an oversize mandolin — made from mulberry wood which can sound almost electrically amplified. (Ozkan does not like mi-crophones.) The frets are arranged to accom-modate quarter-tones. There are basically three other man is the core formily (a member of the sub-groups in the saz family (a member of the inte tribe). The small three-stringed "cura" is played by buskers and children. The middle-

Relating to him as a guru, they helped him serve tea. After inviting me back, he played a song (he knows thousands by memory). He never said so but it was obviously an apology. Not accus-tomed to a performance during the lesson, the students were rapt. The song was melodic yet thythmic, in an odd time but danceable, ancient but spontaneous, his fingers on milberry wood found him surrounded by saz students. A fine but spontaneous, his fingers on mulberry wood sounded almost like a tabla. Virtuoso stuff. We were all very moved. Traditional Turkish music is broken down into makams and taqsims. A makam is a "place," or tonal base. There are over 50 makams in current use. Centuries ago there were hundreds. They can be roughly compared to Indian ragas. Taosims are improvisations based on the makams. Each makam varies according on the marams, raco maram venes according to which note of the scale it begins on, and each scale has many variations. For example, the makam called "rast" is a "slightly Orientalized" G-major scale. He sang it for me and I heard that it was just a matter of adding what jazzmen call "blue notes into inscrutability), but he said: "Music is basically the same everywhere when you get right down to it. We all have the same problems in life. We eat, we get jealous, we go to the movies. So we have music with the same spirit. This said, we have different neighbors, some of us eat less well than others, we fight wars.

There was a synthesis in the 16th and 17th centuries. All the great civilizations were brought together there, from Europe and the Orient alike. Our richness comes from that. For example, we have more rhythmic variety than anyone dse."

fact all time signatures can be reduced to four, the rhythm to which mankind marches.

I expected him to agree, but defensive; "Tur-key is richer than Indian when it comes to time signatures." He sang and tapped to illustrated Turkish subdivisions of 22, of nine, and how eight can be divided either 3-2-3, 2-3-3 or 3-3-2. He thought the Turks were the only people to divide eight into 3-2-3 until, five years ago, he saw Mongols dancing to the same mythm. "Oriental music goes from Yugoslavia to Japan," he said.

He has a plan to write a "big book" about Oriental music. So far it is only in his head and first he must travel to Hungary, Bulgaria, Ro-mania and Moldava to study the music of Turkish minorities; each is different from the others and finite marked. others and their homeland. ODIE FOSTER has been handed a rare deal by Polygram Filmed Entertainment - her own production com-pany, allowing her to build on her unusual mixture of roles as actress, director and producer. Foster's three-year deal has no price tag attached, but it is a rare recognition in an industry that has few women at the top. The actress, a child of Hollywood who celebrated her 30th birthday last week, made her first appearance in a Coppertone TV commercial, all dimples. She has never stopped working. In Martin Scorsese's "Taxi Driver" (1976), she was a teenage prostitute; she won an Academy Award for her role of rape survivor in "The Accused" (1988) and again, for portraying a high-powered FBI special agent in "Silence of the Lambs" (1991). Last year, she made her first film as director, "Little Man Tate," about a gifted

Prior to the Polygram deal she was working on a film about the late Jean Seberg, and the project is still in development. Foster was interviewed on the phone from

The strategy is rather than saying we're a genre house — we only make romantic connedies or action adventure movies - because I've done every type of illm in my life, there isn't to the specific genre. We want signature filmmakers: as long as they understand they're going to be financially re-sponsible, they can make their own movie.

ARIS -Sergei Eisenstein's "The Battleship Potenkin" has been acclaimed as the height of cinematic achievement since it was made in 1925. It has been in circulation for decades, though often in cut and poorquality versions. At the Opera Bastille it was recently projected in its entirety with Mark Andreas conducting the Sudw lische Philharmouie in Edmund Meisel's score for silent masterpiece. The opera's 2,700 scats were sold out for the single performance, and the enthusiasm that prected it indicates that large andiences might support its general release. In 1925 the Soviet government was anxious to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the failed 1905 revolution. Eisenstein, then 27, was assigned to make a film. The previous year he had made his first full length feature, "Strike," that depicted the Czarist police suppression of a workers' uprising

It bewildered the authorities with innovations by a young director who had been trained as a civil engineer before joining an avant-garde theater group.

At the time, Russian moviegoers preferred foreign films to their own, and espe-cially enjoyed the American variety. Eisenstein, too, was fascinated by all of them and carefully studied the photographic technique of D. W. Griffith's "Intoler-ance" (1916). By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribuni ONDON - On the Cottesloe stage of the National, "Stages" reunites Alan Bates with the writer David Storey and the director Lindsay Anderson for a no-interval 90-minute piece which is not so much of a play as a poetic monologue interrupted by four women. Bates is that familiar figure from Storeyland, the working-class writer agonized by London success that has cut him off from his northern roots.

Add to that a midlife crisis made up of nervous breakdown and write's block, plus the ongoing guilt of a long affair with his wife's mother, and it is not hard to see why Bates should have to spend most of the evening in a state of shaggy internal exile.

The women, each of whom makes one solo visit to try to shake him from madness or lethargy, are his ex-wife, his daughter, his neighbor and his psychiatrist, but none meets with any real success. We are left as we began, contemplating the bleak terrain of Storey's superbly poetic vision.

But there is a terrible lack of drama here. Storey is content to paint his character in infinite detail and lyrical poetry, but seens unable to give him anything to do once the "dark tornado" of depression has overtaken his soul.

This great poem of a play, seeming at times immensely antobiographical and at others neu-trally spiritual, is really an outpouring of obses-sive melancholia, better suited to a psychiatric couch than a theater. For all that, it is immaculately staged and played.

Perched uneasily somewhere midway be-tween his novels and what he called his "enter-

My Aunt" has always proved tricky for adap tors. Twenty years ago, George Cukor tried to make it over into a film (first for Katharine Hepburn, who was then replaced by Maggie uth) and now it comes to the stage of Wyndhams in a still more courageous venture, as narrated and acted by four middle-aged men --who play all 26 roles in the play — whose only allowance toward the women they often have to play is a faint raising of voice or cycbrow.

Thus we get Simon Cadell swooping around the stage like Edith Evans on speed, John Wells playing teenage female hippies, and Richard Kane as about a dozen other characters of assorted ages and sexes. The result is a thoroughly eccentric and bizarrely entertaining evening.

Its central joke is the way the formidable Aunt Augusta manages so to corrupt her retired bank-manager nephew that he ends up in a plot and counterplot of murder and espionage and art-smuggling, all the while under the impression that he is mercly taking care of an elderly and wayward relative.

At the King's Head in Islington, the largest cast ever assembled on that tiny stage (35 in all) have come together for a show that is somewhat longer than its title: "Elegies for Angels, Punks and Raging Queens." With lyncs and mono-logues by Bill Russell and music by Jane Hood, the show is an anthology inspired by the AIDS quilt with each of its sections devoted to the brief tale of one person killed by the virus.

This remarkable and heartbreaking show is more cabaret than play. But as each character completes his or her tale from beyond the grave, the actor goes up stage to join others on rows of bleachers until at the last, the entire set is filled tainments," Graham Greene's "Travels With with these members of an angry and often accus-

All have died of a disease which seems to be taking the brightest and the best as fast as it can. But through these songs, angry or comic, rebellious or resigned, there emerges a chorus of scaring power. By the time all these ghosts have come back to take their places on the bleachers, as mute witnesses of each other's tragedics. there is no more touching nor dramatic sight on any London stage.

"Art is sexy; art is money; art is money-sexy-social-climbing-fantastic:" So begins "Three Birds Alighting on a Field," Timberlake Wer-tenbaker's acid clegy for the 1980s that now makes a welcome return to the Royal Court a year or so after it was first seen there. Doing for the art market essentially what Caryl Chur-chill's "Serious Money" did for the '80s City on that same stage, Wertenbaker's play has at its center a simple thesis: that the fluctuating val-ues of a single painting (or in this case a blank canvas, selling at several million dollars) can be seen as a metaphor for the valuations we have recently come to put on society itself.

Fast-talking auctioneers, desperate art deal-ers, gullible collectors, patrons with more taste than money, even a Romanian exile who seems to think that his country's recent troubles should give him free access to any painting that takes his fancy: all are assembled here in Max Stafford-Clark's fluid, agile, brisk production as figures in the landscape of modern Britain. Happily, Wertenbaker has removed the clumsi-er Greek-myth illusions and sketches that once marred the script, and her play is now a shining morality piece about the social code that conditioned Britain in the '80s. With a little luck, it may also prove an epitaph.

A. Enough is a relative word: I'm a filmmaker and unfortunately, there aren't enough filmmakers who become producers, who follow a movie all the way from inception to the development of an idea, setting up a movie so that the amount of money it costs is appropriate to the material. . . . It's something I want to do, rather than being just a director for hire or an actor for hire.

Q. Will you seek to do something different from what's going on in Hollywood? A. I grew up in Hollywood and I think, especially in Europe, when you say Holly-wood it's like saying Wall Street: people conjure up this image. What's important to know is that there are many different layers of the film inductor mean different neuro of of the film industry, many different ways of making a movie - not just hiring Bruce Willis and Arnold Schwarzenegger and having a movie that costs a fortune.

Q. What's the difference about this deal? A. What's different is that I fulfill three functions: I'm an actress, so the stature of my acting puts me in films that are competitive with any studio films; I also direct, so there's a whole range of films, from the smaller inde-pendent film to the large studio film, and then production, which frankly I think more than anything else they want me for.

Q. So you would direct some of these films vourself

A. Yes, that's the idea, but it's more a producing idea than an actor vanity deal or a director vanity deal, or simply developing stuff so that I can get a job.

Q. Would you be doing something ontside the current trend of popular films like "Hon-

Q. Why, do you think, are there so few women directors in Hollywood?

A. 1 do think that's changing; there's great wisdom in oot dwelling on the ills of the past and trying to be part of the solution. . . . One reason there are more men is because they've been allowed the freedom to create their vision: Coppola is an example of someone who takes incredible risks - and "Dracula" is incredibly gorgeous. Here's a man who's had financial difficulties and yet somebody at some point said. Look we know you've had financial difficuloes, but we still believe in you. That's not a luxury a woman has. As a woman, either you're going to be profitable, or you'll never work again. There are a lot of Catch 22 propositions: they hire a young director but don't have enough faith in her to leave her alone, so they surround her with people who bully her, or they give her a genre film because they don't have enough faith to let her make a real movie. That's the kind of thing women have been fighting against so long.

Q. Does acting still come first for you? A. I include acting in filmmaking. There's nothing about acting that keeps me from doing other things — acting is something I we done for so long — but directing keeps me from doing other things. Acting has always been something I do: it's not everything I do. One reason I only work as an actress for hire once a year is that I can't find anything that's good enough.

points this month to 34.9, and its index of expectations turned significantly more optimistic, up 16 points to 86. One result was slightly stronger buying plans for cars and major appliances.

"The improvement in consum-er confidence in November is consistent with recent economic news," said Fabian Linden, the survey director, who pointed to increases in industrial output, employment and retail sales. Mr. Linden said it was unlikely that the election of a new presi-dent had boosted confidence because past elections showed no correlation with the index, and in any case "people are not crediting Bill Clinton with magic powers." The Board's annual survey of Christmas sales projected a rise of 6.5 percent over last year. Johnson's Redbook, a weekly report of retail sales, projected a rise of 8 to 9 percent. If those forecasts prove correct, it would be the first Christmas in two years to show improved sales. But Mr. Linden cautioned that "while consumer confidence is up smartly in November, it is still at a level that is historically associated with a lackluster economy. We have a long way to go before we are in a full recovery mode."

Other economists echoed his cantion. David C. Munro of High Frequency Economics said he was "not among the analysts crowing" — and would not be until labor market indicators show serious promise of more jnbs. He said he expected retail indicators to slack off as they did last year --- and the Federal Reserve to cut short-term interest rates by a quarter point just be-fore the last weekend of Christmas shopping on Dec. 18.

Magazino-industry executives love big numbers. So they salivate at the possibilities presented by America's 33 million children aged 4 to 12 who spend or influence the spending of more than $170 billion a year, according to Nina B. Link, senior vice president and publisher of the magazine group at CTW.

"There has been an explosion of new kids' magazines," Ma. Link told publishers at the American Magazine Conference last month. "In the past five years, the number of magazines for youngsters has almost doubled with the introduction of 81 new titles. There are over 150 magazines for kids that are as diverse as their adult counterparts."

Magazine publishers also are very much aware of the shifts in children's television viewing habits: a jump in the use of videocas-sette recorders and video games. Publishers are eager to take sene recorders and video games, rubinants are eager to take whatever advantage they can of such trends as the reduction in Saturday morning children's television programs and the somewhat smaller fall-off in children's afternoon television viewing.

"The kids' print market is truly one of the growth markets in the business," said Lynn Lehmknhl, publisher of Disney Adventures. "But advertising is all being functed into television because advertis-

NEW YORK - Signs of a stronger economy sparked a rally in U.S. stocks on Tuesday, driving several market averages to new highs. No one is expecting the Federal Reserve to lower interest rates, so good economic news is exactly the right medicine for the stock market," said Barry Berman, head trader at Robert W. Baird & Co. The Dow Jones industrial average gained 25.66, to 3,248.70. The aircraft industry, announced Toesday it would trim production rates next year on its 757 and 767 jetimers and may cut 2,500 jobs as a result. The 757 production rate will decrease from 8.5 airplanes a month to 7 a month is 1000 for the state of the sta month in June, then to 5 a month in November 1993. The cut to 7 a month had originally been planned to take effect next September. The 767 production rate, now 5 a month, will be trimmed to 4 a month beginning in November 1993. As many as 2,000 workers in Seattle, and 500 in Wichita, Kausas, could be affected by the moves.

Boeing May Trim 2,500 Jobs SEATTLE (UPI) - Boeing Co., citing the shump in the commercial-

Sara Lee Seeks New Europe Opening

CHICAGO (Bioamberg) --- Sara Lee Corp. said Tuesday it was holding talks about acquiring BP Nutrition's consumer foods group, the Netherlands-based meat-packaging division of a British Petroleum Co. unit, and predicted an accord by the end of the year. The acquisition would mark Sara Lee's entry into the Enropean meat industry. In the United States, Sara Lee is a leader in the packaged-meats industry, with brands including Jimmy Dean, Hillshire Farm and Ball Park. Its packaged meat sales were $2.7 billion in the year ended in June. Based in Bunnik, Netherlands, BP Nutrition's consumer food group Based in Bunnik, Netherlands, BP Nutrition's consumer food group and Civics to 10,125. Toyota Motor Corp. reported a 9.2 percent drop in car sales to 7,764.

General Motors Debt Downgraded

NEW YORK (Bloomberg) - Moody's Investors Service said Tuesday it had lowered its ratings on $70 billion of debt issued by General Motors Corp. and its subsidiaries, General Motors Accep-tance Corp. and GM Hughes Electronics Corp., to the lowest category of investment grade.

Senior debt of the No. I U.S. automaker was lowered two notches, to "Baa1" from "A2." Moody's said the move reflected GM's weakening competitive position in North America.

For the Record

Allied-Signal Inc. said it received a $526 million contract extension from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to provide support services at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center. (Reuters) Upjoin Co. said Tuesday the government planned no further action after completing its investigation of the company's reporting practices and regulatory compliance on the sleeping pill Halcion. KHABAROVSK. Russia As winter descends on this hilly city near China's castern frontier, the ferocious grinding and crash-ing of ice floes on the Amur River can be heard all over town. Almost as evident is this huge, resource-rich region's shift from bulwark of Soviet defense against Asia to fledgling satellite of the Asian economic orbit.

Toyotas and Nissans crowd ont Russian-made automobiles on the streets. Stores offer instant noodles and ginseng candy from Hong. Kong alongside jars of Russian preserved vegetables. Several Japanese and Chinese restaurants have opened, catering to Asian businessmen and ups-cale local residents. The city's flea market has become a huge outdoor bazaar for Chinese peddlers selling food, shoes and brightly colored down coats.

So vital have things Asian become that some schools offer Chinese and Korean language instruc-tion and will soon teach Japanese.

"I think the trend is already clear." said Valery Tikhonov, deputy governor of the Khaba-rovsk regina, which stretches more than 1,000 miles (1,600 kilometers) from China's Manchurian border to the northern shore of the Sea of Okhotsk. "Ties will be firmer with the Asian nations than with Moscow."

Since the collapse of the Soviet Union and central planning late last year, this region has suffered as much as any. Many enterprises and factories are barely operating, and residents already have endured much of one winter without heat, hot water or electricity. No longer able to rely on Moscow, seven time zones to the west, the 6 million people of Russia's Far East have begun to look closer to home for help — to the bustling economies of Japan, South Korea and China.

President Boris N. Yeltsin, visiting South Korea last week in his first official trip to an Asian country, signed new agreements to resume Korean investment in his struggling nation. He is sched-uled to visit China next month.

timber, mining and port develop-ment. Under the accords reached with Mr. Yeltson last week, the government is to resume dis-bursements under a $3 billion package of credits, which had been suspended after Russia defaulted on interest payments.

Despite the rapid pace of change, Khabarovsk officials say much of it is too superficial to rescue Russia's economy. "So far we have only a kopeck's worth of joint wentures," said Mr. Tik-honov, adding that each joint venture employs, on average, fewer than 30 people. The benefits to the region's population so far are very small."

Still, the draw of these territories remains strong for Japanese companies that want to position themselves for the time when this market may boom. "This part of the world is one of the few areas that remains unexplored," said

Kadzunori Kawabara, deputy director of Amur Trading Co., a joint venture with investments in Japanese restaurants, a hotel and fishing facilities.

TOKYO - Sanyo Electric Co. said Tuesday it had renewed a cross-license agreement with Texas Instruments Inc. on semiconductor technology, ending a two-year dispute with the U.S. company. Sanyo and TI will withdraw their suits against each other in U.S. courts, said Hiroyaki Okamoto of Sanyo Electric. A key TI manufacturing technology that was a source of the dispute was not included in the new accord, which runs through November 1996.

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches TOKYO - An unprecedented second straight decline in Japan's key money-supply gauge gave new evidence of economic weakness but was unlikely to spark a cut in interest rates, economists said Tuesday.

The money supply, M2 plus certificates of deposit, fell 0.6 percent in October after a revised decline of 0.5 percent in September, the Bank of Japan said. The September decline, the first ever, was reported originally as 0.4 percent. Economists said low demand for loans by corpora-tions was slowing money-supply growth. "People are waiting for signs of recovery before they step up investment," said Matthew Berlow, senior economist at Credit Lyonnais Securities (Japan).

Liquidation of bank deposits by corporations to make up for reduced earnings and banks' reluctance to actively seek deposits also contributed, economists said.

A broader measure of money supply, which includes deposits in Japan's massive postal savings sys-tem, grew by 2.8 percent in October from a year carlier, up from 2.6 percent in September.

Economists said the figures would not prompt the Bank of Japan to cut its discount rate, which stands at 3.25 percent. The chairman of the Japan Federation of Bankers Associations said the central bank should withhold a rate cut for use as a "trump card," if the parliament passes a supplementary budget to boost the economy. ### Hot Times in Moscow As Temperatures Fall

tional Herald Tribune

ONDON — How quickly the soldiers of CSKA Moscow have L learned to take the money and run. Having disposed of European Champions Cup holder Barcelona, they visit Bruges for Wednesday'a start of the richest round-robin semifinal that soccer has staged.

Start of the market sound-found semifluar that soccer has sugged. But their's will not be the glamor match of the day. FC Bruges, beaten 3-0 by Cercle Bruges last weekend, works with Belgian pragmatism behind the breakaways of Nigerian sprinter Daniel Amokachi.

The contest between Glasgow Rangers and Olympique Marseille will be a more impassioned affair. The FC Porto-PSV Eindhoven match will have the best weather. The AC Milan-IFK Gothenburg match will pit the lira hillionaires against Sweden's studied calm.

With each team getting UEFA bonuses of $350,000 a point, not to mention the personal inducements of chub paymasters, might we for once be spared tactical caution? Don't bank on it: The priority will still be to reach the final next May, and to-ward that end not to lose away from home

For CSKA's foot soldiers, there is no home. They have been made orphans by the Russian winter, playing abroad while snow and ice puts soccer beyond bounds in Moscow, CSKA's compensation for playing "home" matches in Germany is financial. Before a ball is kicked, the eight teams left each get $1.5 million, plus an eighth of just over half the television and advertising revenues, plus the home gate money - a $10 million package for the big clubs. For Milan, this goes some way toward justifying Silvio Berlusconi's massive outlay on building virtually two teams, to cope with the Italian league and now the European "mini-league" of six matches between now and the final. With respect to Van Basten, Gullit, Baresi and Lentini, we speak of them often and we expect them to be finalists. The Russian Army team intrignes me more.

Indeed, the intrigne is not going down well back home, where the boast is that Moscow has become the hot, if snow-bound, soccer city of Emope. As well as CSKA in the Champions' Cup, Spartak will play in the Cup Winners' Cup quarterfinals Wednesday and Dynamo in the UEFA Cup.

But Muscovites are responding with equal measures of pride and disgust toward men they are suddenly encouraged to salute as heroes of the new Russia. The cheers might be wholehearted if Moscow Spartak does well against Feyenoord of Rotterdam, or if Dynamo Moscow conquers Benfica. Feelings toward CSKA, however, are hardening.

Why? Money, money, money. Imagine you are a Russian, paid $20 per month for your labors, and you read on the front page of izvestiya that the boys from CSKA were offered $25,000 for beating Barcelona.

N OW THE CYNICS may well be right when they say the cash was put on the table by the army chiefs only after CSKA had drawn the I v put on the table by the army chiefs only after CSKA had drawn the Moscow leg against the European Champion, and thus was an induce-ment no one ever expected to pay. Complaints may be entitled to CSKA being effectively made Russia's last state-funded sports team. And not too many outside the club are much appeased by Viktor Murashko, General Murashko, the CSKA president, saying, "We shall get all that money back because we have reached the the last eight."

But tell that to the people who, as one Russian paper pointed out, would have to work 100 years to reap what their "soldiers" picked up in one windfall.

Tell them about the lottery of sporting life that can bring a soccer player to nothing in one tackle, or land him the riches that opened up to CSKA goalkeeper Dimitri Kharin, who, after Barcelona, signed a contract to join Chelsea once the British government processes his work permit.

The envy that is human nature is compounded by allegations in Sovietski Sport and Pravda that CSKA threw a match against Vladikavkaz last summer, when CSKA lost at home, 4-2. The newspapers quoted Pavel Sadyrin, the national coach, as saying that "we have a group of eminent footballers who were unable to resist a bribe."

The coach is now furious --- with the journalist he claims reported what he told them in confidence. Since his ire hardly amounts to a retraction. we await word from Moscow of what might happen to the playing stars after the messenger has been shot.

There are, I'm sure, far more pressing problems for the folks trying to get through this Russian winter. But what a great pizy that CSKA, having already accomplished mission impossible in Barcelona, may not provide the untainted glimmer of joy that was theirs a couple of weeks ago.

Mark Rypien, fambling as he was sacked by Pat Swilling, was less than happy with another loss.

Ajax Wins Cup Match, Auxerre Ties in Liège

Ajax Amsterdam defeated injury-riddled FC Kaiserslantern, 2-0, Tuesday in Amsterdam for a clear but patchy victory in a first-leg, third-rouod UEFA Cup soccer The defending champions scored their first goal with just 40 seconds gone on the clock. Kaiserslautem's goalkeeper, Michael Serr, deflected a shot from the Ajax forward Marco Overmars, but the striker Edgar Davids controlled the ball and took it past one defender before sliding it under Serr. The Dutch team had to wait until the 40th minute for its second score, which the midfielder Wim Jonk got with a powerful, low shot from outside the penalty area. Ajax created mumerous good nces in a fast-flowing match, with the midfielder Marciano Vink and forward Dennis Bergkamp Their opponents, without four first-team players, stayed largely in their ball of the playing field after conceding Davids's goal and made

Michael Goossens scored twice, in the 8th and 47th minutes, to put Liège in a comfortable position for the return match.

But just as Liège thought it had the match won, Patrick Verlaat, Auxerre's Dutch defender, headed in a corner in the 56th minute. Fifteen minutes later, Verlaat controlled the ball in the goal mouth and passed to Gerald Bati-cle, who tapped the ball past Stan-dard's goalkeeper, Gilbert Bodard, to make it 2-2. Verlaat drew a red card 15 minutes from the end for stopping a high pass toward the Auxerre penalty area with both hands.

Anderlecht 0, Paris St. Germain 0: In Paris, both teams were reduced to 10 players, but the French team had a oumber of chances that kept Anderlecht's goalkeeper, Filip de Wilde, busy. George Weah, Paris St. Ger-main's Liberian striker, helped by the Brazilian midfielder Valdo, made deep penetrations into Belgian territory. The French club was reduced to 10 players in the 28th minute when David Ginola was given a red card after protesting a fault against him. Even with his team down a man. the Parisian goalkeeper, Bernard Lama, was able to withstand the Belgian pressure. Less than 15 minotes into the secood half Anderlicht's Philippe Albert was sent off when he fouled Valdo. When the teams were even, Paris-SG got back into the match but failed to score.

Borussia Dortmund 3, Zaragoza

1: In Dortmund, Germany, Stephane Chapuisat opened the scoring for the hosts in the 11th minute. Michael Zorc made it 2-0 for Dortmund 10 minutes later, and Flemming Povisen scored on an 11meter foul shot in the 42d. Dario Javier Franco scored Zar-agosa's goal in the 51st minute.

Saints Near Berth in Playoffs After Marching Over Redskins Hong Kong Races

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS - The New Orleans Saints, who almost always win but rarely impress, did something impressive against the Washington Redskins.

With Rickey Jackson's two sacks leading the defense and Dalton Hilliard and Bobby Hebert providing the offense, the Saints beat the injury-beset Redskins, 20-3. Monday night. Their third loss in four games dropped the National Football Leagne's defending champi-ons to 6-5 and put them in danger of missing the playoffs, let alone getting back to the Super Boy

The Saints, meanwhile, are just about assured of a wild-card playoff spot after winning for the sixth time in their last seven games.

The Saints got an 18-yard touchdown run by

The Redskins, meanwhile, could do nothing on offense, a futility exemplified by three plays late in the third quarter after they had moved to a first down at midfield.

On first down, Gary Clark dropped a pass at the New Orleans 10. On second down Mark Rypien, 21 of 38 for 207 yards, overthrew an open Clark in the end zone. On third down, Wayne Martin sacked Rypien for a 16-yard loss. Rypien, who is missing three offensive line starters, was visibly angered after the series, typical of this season for the Redskins. They have now scored 178 points in 11 games combared to 485 in 16 last season, when they went

4-2 and won the Super Bowl. The Saints' offense, stalled for most of the first half, finally came to life to score two touchdowns in a 3-minute span late in the first half to take control. Both scores were helped by

N EW YORK - I have a won-derful idea for today's article, and will write it down as soon as I remember what it is. You are certain to be enthralled by it. That's what I said to myself when the idea came to mind.

"Now that," I said to myself, "is an idea that will enthrall every reader." That much I remember with some accuracy because I was in the midst of saying it to myself when the phone rang. Naturally I interrupted myself to answer the phone. I constantly interrupt conversations with people far more interesting than myself when the phone rings. Why should myself deserve more courtesy than I would give somebody interesting?

Well, a human voice, female, asks if I am who I am. Her mention of my name immediately brings it back to me. She is right. That is my name. Odd how easy it becomes to forget a name.

It must have something to do with everybody being named Jason or Samantha nowadays. Don't try forgetting your Social Security number though, or officious drones will clean your clock. Or is "hang you out to dry" the idiom I'm looking for? "Pump you up," maybe? Or could it be "leave you twisting slowly in the wind"? Remember when everybody used to say -- well, whatever it was they used to sav? The phone voice says, "How are you today? This is Jo Ann, speak-ing for the United Sufferers of the World. We'd like to find out whether you have a heart as big as all outdoors or whether you are a cheap, selfish, penny-pinching . . .

п

Those were not her precise words. I can't remember anybody's precise words anymore, not even my own. Precise words were the first thing I started forgetting, and it's made me a happier man. It makes me intensely happy at this very instant to realize that I can't remember a single precise word spoken by anybody in that presidential thing we had here some time back on the Jack Paar Show. As long as I get their drift, precise words don't matter. Since flocks of Jo Anns are constantly phoning me up, their drift is so familiar to me that I don't have to listen anymore. They are itching to give me light bulbs or plastic trash bags if I will send money to fight suffering. I apparently got her off the phone somehow, because I just looked over at the telephone and noticed I wasn't talking on it. Let's hope I haven't ordered bulbs and trash bags because they'd have to be stored in the pantry, which means searching the house from top to bottom to find where I left it.

Last time, it turned out to be right on top of my eyeglasses. "If it had been a snake it would have bit me," I told my son, happily echoing my mother's famous words of long

"Pantries don't bite anymore, Dad," he said, but not in those precise words of course. That boy is a block right off the old chip. From the age of 5 to 9 he could never remember where he'd left his shoes. Though maybe that was his sister. Anyhow when Sallie Lou finished shattering my concentration with ber light-bulb chatter, my wonderful idea for today's article had gone into hiding. Having dealt with this problem before, I knew how to recover it. The trick is to go to the place where the idea first came to mind: a second-floor bathroom in this case.

I went upstairs and, entering the bedroom, stubbed my toe on a volume of Marcel Proust's "Remembrance of Things Past," which must have fallen from my limp hands after narcotizing me the night before

Upon setting Proust upright, I remembered that I had come upstairs for some purpose, and had now forgotten what the purpose was. Experience had taught me how to deal with that too; Go back downstairs to the very place where you decided to go upstairs, and the purpose for going upstairs would instantly become clear,

Now I sit here processing words, either halfway up or halfway down the staircase, waiting for that wonderful idea to return. Meantime I've forgotten whether I should be going up the stairs or down.

Hugh Hefner, 66, Nothing Left to Prove

By Alex Witchel

New Yest Times Service HOLMBY HILLS. California — There is something unsettling about the grounds of the Playboy mansion. It's not the flamingos shedding by the lake. Or the chicken with a red and navy face. Or even the dejected-looking albino peacock. And the enormous cage of — what else? - 40 bunnies blinking in the sunlight is no surprise. It's the distinctly creepy feeling that someone is watching you. Which he is. In the Gothic stone mansion, right at the topmost tunet, Hugh Heiner is perched near his office window, surveying his five and a half acres (2.2 hectares) of home. He is observing some of his staff of 70 put up a tent for the Los Angeles premiere party for "Hugh Hefner: Once Upon a Time," the David Lynch-Mark Frost documentary on the lounder and editor of Playboy magazine. Five hundred guests have been invited to the mansion to celebrate the life of this direct descendant of William Bradford, a Punitan sovemor of the Plymouth Bay Colony. They were coming to pay tribute the man who revolutionized sex in America with the maxim that if sex with emotional involvement is best, sex without emotional involvement is better than none at all.

Invitations to the mansion are mandatory pow, a departure from the old days when the party never ended and the doors never closed. Hugh Marston Hefner is 66, and the new Mrs. Hefner, Kimberley Conrad, 29, who was the 1989 Playmate of the Year, prefers to play in private,

Despite his image as a relentless bon vivant, Heiner has always lived as a rectuse (he famously slept through a number of his star-studded scirces). Critzen Hef, as his staff sometimes calls him, is nothing if not a genius at reading the signs of the times, and in the mid-1980s he saw that it was his moment to recede from the mainstream.

Since 1953, Playboy had defined the sexual fantasies of generations of men with its airbrushed photographs of buxom women and frank talk about sex. Hefner became isputed leader of the sexual revolution of the 1960s. in this price way almost inevitably to a world of MTV, Madonna and Marky Mark. By the mid-1980s, AIDS, more than anything else, had tarnished the appeal of promiscuity — or free love, as it was formerly known which had begun in earnest with the birth-control pill in the early 1960s. The Playboy centerfold seemed suddenly as dated as the Gibson girl.

Hefner relinquished the chairmanship of Playboy Enterprises to his daughter, Christie, in 1988, though he still controls 70 percent of the company's stock. He married Conrad in 1989 and they have two sons, Marston, who is 2, and Cooper, 14 months. And while he keeps his hand in at ne, still choosing every cover and centerfold, he is no longer actively involved in any of the company's numerous business ventures, which range from a mailorder catalogue of Playboy products - everything from mugs to lingeric - to programming for international television and home video.

Visits to the mansion are as carefully comrolled as all other aspects of Hefner's life. The mansion is strictly English countryside. A stone cabana sits nearby with a circular staircase to an underground gym. The famous grotto is a stearning enclave with a bubbling Jacuzzi where the couches are cut into the wall and gnests can swim through an opening in the rock to the pool outside. In a series of small caves are the exotic birds that Hefner raises in captivity and sometimes trades with zoos. He also fancies monkeys --- vast, heated cages of them. A lighted path leads the way through a forest of redwoods, back toward the main house. The wishing well on the front lawn is considered a landmark; it is where Heiner proposed to Courad.

It is lunchtime. In a dark King Arthurish dining room filled with enormous furniture, a small round table has been set near the window. A wooden box silently summons a builer for the 1990s. The heavy drapery at the far wall sweeps aside and Hefner enters.

His pajamas are purple silk, his robe black velvet, the slippers black suede, the socks white cotton. He looks downright dapper, especially with the white hair at his temples. His brown eyes are sharp and intelligent, and there is no sign of the stroke he suffered in 1985. Almost every motivation Hefper has ever had, by his own admission, has been a reaction against his devout Methodist parents. "The real Rosebud of my life was the Puritans," he says. "My parents' inability to show love in a physical or emotional way. My mother is 97 years old; abe'll be here for Thanksgiving. I think she's very proud of me. I've tried to communicate with her, but you reach a point where you live in two different worlds. "My other Citizen Kane image was my bunny blanket, which was white with bunnies on it. When I was 6 or 7 I had to have an ear operation, and I wanted a dog more than anything, so after the operation my parents got me a fox terrier. And I. loved it so much, I gave him my blanket for his box. But he got sick and died and the blanket had to be burned." He amiles styly. "So you could say that's why I went out and created an entire burny empire."

Though the empire is smaller now, it still runs his way. He is at work each morning by 10:30 on his antobiography for Bantam. "It's almost like selfanalysis for me," he says. "I started to see a number of reasons for the things that were unique about my life and how I was influenced by the media of my childhood. And how, in time, I have influenced generations through the magazine. Playboy has become a wonderful rite of passage. Its message for children is that sex is good. The idea of women as playthings is someone clse's political agenda. It is not my view or anyone's at the magazine."

"There is an edge of hostility now to the war of the sexes," he adds. "It used to be the kind of thing Thurber would draw cartoons about in The New Yorker. Now people have lifted human relation-ships into a political forum. I find that sad.

"I think the real question is why, after a sernal revolution began in the '50s, did the women's movement seize upon an auti-second theme. It's a mystery, though with women there always seems to be a though with women there always seems to be a Puritan element. When they got the vote we almost simultaneously got Prohibition. A significant part of the hurtful side of feminism is failing to understand how a hurtful childhood can shape you, and instead trying to politicize all behavior. There's really no benefit to viewing sex as the enemy. The sex act is some of the best of what we are, as family, and as a civilization. The notion that sex and violence are connected like law and order is antrue. They are polar opposites. One is hurting; one is hugging."

True. Yet the sort of sex most people imagine took place in the Playboy mansion wasn't necessarily the hugging sort. "There has certainly been multipartner sex here," Heiner says. (In the film, he munbers his partners at "probably more than a thousand.") "Part of my life has seen an adventure in the experimentation of the outer boundaries of sexuality, testing the outer limits of what you can do and still consider yourself moral. When I was growing up there were very simple 'thou shalt nots.' And if you accept that premise, you never ask the real, more complicated questions. Morality is not defined by numbers of pariners. You can have sex with one person and have a very immoral relationship."

"I'm one of the luckiest gays in the world," he contin-ues. "The boy in me who wanted to live a wonderful life and be famous like a movie star got his 15 minutes, which. turned out to be 40 years. Like the Great Gatsby, my view of my life was very much as an adolescent boy. The child in me was always the best of who I am. Twe never let go of

"I no longer have to prove anything to 'them': parents, or society," he says with gemine conteniment. "I'm at a place now where I've fought my battles. I'm having a parade. It's celebration time."

PEOPLE

This Divorce Settlement Won't Break Wyman

End of the Party: London's High Court has set Bill Wyman's divorce settlement with the ailing Mandy Smith at £580,000 ($880,000), far below the £5 million the former model had sought. Smith will get to keep her £250,000 home in north London, and its contents; and will receive a sum of £130,000, expenses of up to £100,000, and legal costs of £100,000. Smith started dating the multi-millionaire Rolling Stones bass player when she was 13, cansing a stir even in London's blase nightchub world. They were married in 1989 when she was 18 and Wyman 52, but the marriage did not last. Smith spent months hospitalized with a wasting disease that has not been been publicly identified.

In Detroit, former basketball star Spencer Hayward and his ex-wife, the model Iman, now married to David Bowie, settled a custody suit over their daughter, Zulekha Haywood. It gives Iman "reason-able" visiting rights.

The Argument Tube: Mia Far-Aller's allegation that she had threatened his life during their child custody battle, saying that, if the threat were true, he would have reported it to authorities. The lawyer, Alan Dershowitz, told CBS TV it was "inconceivable" that Allen would have taken no formal action. Allen, also talking on television, said his love affair with Farrow was over years ago and the relationship with Soon-Yi Farrow Previn, a college student and Farrow's adopted daughter, came after it was over.

Judy Nelson, the former live-in companion of tennis star Martina Navratilova, has auctioned off gifts and other goods accumulated during the couple's relationship, which ended in a public legal battle. Nelson, who in 1984 made tabloid headlines when she left her husband to move in with Navratilova, disposed of about $200,000 worth of jewelry, furniture and art at auction in Dallas.

His can- tionary tale conveys a sense of déjá vu about present Mideast develop- ments. Jast as fears of revolution- ary Iran drove Washington blindhy into the arms of Saddam Hussein, the new obsession with Saddam is blinding policymakers to the fun- damentalist and military threat to emerging in Iran. For a completely different look at U. S. power, take "The End of the American Century." Surfing on highlights of the superpower strag- gle, this vivid tale, with its slightly breathless style, often reads less like a book and more like a putative "Cold War: the Movie."
